DCJS RFP General Information

The New York State Division of Criminal Justice Services (DCJS) seeks proposals to support programs that deliver targeted, effective interventions which aim to reduce recidivism and victimization while also reducing unnecessary reliance on costly incarceration.

DCJS seeks proposals from local government and community-based programs/agencies that have experience working with criminal justice populations or have the interest and ability to work with criminal justice involved populations to deliver effective, targeted interventions that reduce criminal behaviors by focusing on treatment needs and criminogenic risks. Programs should serve communities with a demonstrated need for services. Proposed programs must have strong collaborations with local criminal justice agencies, particularly with those who are expected to refer eligible individuals for program services.

Proposal Submission:
Unless otherwise noted, separate proposals must be submitted for each program model:

- An applicant proposing to provide services in multiple non-contiguous counties must provide separate proposals for each jurisdiction and each program model.
- An applicant proposing to provide services from one location but accept referrals from multiple contiguous counties or judicial districts should submit one proposal for each program model proposed.
- New York City is considered one jurisdiction for purposes of this RFP. An applicant proposing to serve individuals from more than one borough or from the entire city should submit one proposal for each program model.

RFP Program Models

Pretrial programs:
Programs serving persons under consideration for Release Under Supervision/Non-Monetary Conditions, when authorized or requested by the court, will interview individuals, and inform conditions of release. Program staff review criminal history for presence of warrants, domestic violence history, and weapons restrictions and advise the court of findings. Additionally, pretrial services agencies will, when authorized or requested by the court, monitor or supervise individuals and refer clients to court ordered services. When requested by the Office of Court Administration, pretrial services agencies will also notify defendants to return for all court appearances.

Target Population:

- Any individual(s) arrested and subject to release under non-monetary conditions.
